

Recruiting New Members of Research Center of Handbills

Handbills (also called handouts or fliers) can be preferable primary sources which quickly show the changes of economy, politics, media, and printing technology in modern Japan. Almost no piece of research, however, can be found in which they are systematically gathered and studied. At Research Center of Handbills, it is aimed to carry out research into handbills based on those handed out in the University of Tokyo every day, and to explore the way to better handbills through the actual printing of them. Would you like to study the "crossing point of modernity", handbills? — Saying like this, you can participate the activities at ease, and it is OK (even recommended) to hold some sets of activities other than this; you are welcomed.

(Research Center of Handbills is founded last year.)

Inquire to: Y. Kobayashi (3rd-year), birakenn@yahoo.co.jp
"Circle Orientation" at room 164